Tweeting early election results may lead to fine

► Rationale behind Section 329 of Canada Elections Act is to let people in the west vote without influence from votes in the east

JOE LOFARO
@METRONEWS.CA

Posting election results on social media sites before polls close on May 2 could land you a $25,000 fine, says Elections Canada.

Section 329 of the Canada Elections Act prohibits transmission of results before all polling stations have closed.

"It's important for us just to remind people that this is still on the books because there are possible ramifications to it," said Elections Canada spokesperson John Enright.

Still, the friendly reminder from Elections Canada isn't sitting well with some Canadians.

Ottawa blogger Peter Raaymakers kickstarted a discussion on Twitter and since then Internet users worldwide have been weighing in on the ban.

On Thursday he tweeted, "@mrbarnabyjones You really think people in the West are influenced by how people in the East are voting?"

Karren Brown from Alberta tweeted, "Think the law has be to (sic) reviewed & updated, but will respect Elxns Cda rules. Not a Conservative."

University of Ottawa Law professor Michael Geist offered his expertise earlier this month in an affidavit for a superior court case challenging the constitutionality of the provision. He wrote that such a ban in 2011 is "simply not possible without inflicting enormous harm to freedom of expression and public confidence in the election system."

► University of Ottawa professor Michael Geist has said the Elections Canada provision would "harm freedom of expression."

"It's not up to Elections Canada to amend this, we're only the administrator. The law is written by Parliament."

Police to revisit racial profiling in fall

The Police Services Board will try a second time to hold a community meeting about racial profiling but not tomorrow night, Coun. Eli El-Chantiry said yesterday.

A meeting originally held Nov. 30 called Let's Chat About Racial Profiling will be rescheduled for this fall.

The November meeting "was derailed because of Stacy Bonds, so now this one (tomorrow) has nothing to do with Stacey Bonds or any specific cases," said El-Chantiry.

Bonds, who is black, is now suing the Ottawa police for $1.2 million over her arrest and strip search in September 2008. Her treatment in police custody was captured on a video that sparked widespread public outrage. A judge stayed charges against her last October in part because of the contents of the video.

One of the Ottawa police officers involved in the arrest and cell-block strip search of Bonds was charged last month following an investigation by the Ontario Special Investigations Unit, a civilian entity that investigates police conduct. JESSICA SMITH

A well-known Ottawa Imam will be speaking about the role of religion in preventing youth crime at the Police Services Board community meeting tomorrow evening.

City councillor and Police Services Board chair Eli El-Chantiry said he's hoping the meeting will encourage parents, grandparents and youth to work together to reach young children before they become involved with street gangs or drugs.

Imam Dr. Ziyad Delic, director of the Canadian Islamic Congress, will be the special guest speaker at the meeting. He plans to say that it takes a village to raise a child, including families,

"I think religious groups, if they are open, if they are really willing to help these youngsters, they could really do quite a lot," said Delic.

Delic said he has found that young people become involved in crime when they have too much time on their hands.

"The best we can give to our kids is our time," said Delic.

The first day of the U.S. Nationals, a heavy snowstorm laid down so much powder some kids in the under 8 half-pipe snowboarding competition couldn't make it to the first jump.

But local eight-year-old snowboarding ace Aidan Ty "ATV" Vallati wasn't about to let that happen to him.

"My coach said just go, don't do a speed check," ATV said, recounting his run at Copper Mountain, Co., earlier this month.

That advice got him to the first jump, but ATV perhaps took it too much to heart, not checking his speed before a second jump and launching himself on a massive 30- to 35-foot jump before crashing.

It was a tense moment for ATV's parents, Rob and Anita, who are now able to laugh about it and proudly point out how their little daredevil got up, shook off the fall and got back into the competition.

ATV's parents say he may opt to stick mainly to training in the next season and further hone his skills, but ATV isn't making any promises.

"I just love to compete," he says smiling.

House fire claims man's life

Police are investigating a west-end fire that killed 63-year-old Ole Hanson Friday morning.

A passerby noticed the blaze at 949 Cavan St. just before 7 a.m. and banged on the door to alert the people inside, fire officials said.

When fire crews arrived, Hanson's son,

Clifford, told them his father was still inside.

Crews found him on the second floor of the burning home and performed CPR, but he died later in hospital, officials said.

Hanson's girlfriend, Casandra Lamoureux, was injured when she jumped from a second-storey window to escape the blaze.

His sister, Eva Bourguignon, and her 11-year-old daughter, Savannah, lived in the basement of the home and escaped uninjured.

Last leg of race starts for leaders

► Ignatieff: Campaign has just begun ► Layton takes lead over Libs in poll
► Harper touts children's art tax credit for fourth time by media counts

The federal party leaders charge into the cut-and-thrust final week of the election campaign today after a docile Easter.

Liberal Leader Michael Ignatieff reached out to voters with a 30-minute television ad. While he championed himself as a family man, a man of the people and a journalist, conspicuously absent was Ignatieff the politician, with the Liberal leader highlighting the fact he's not a "career politician" like Prime Minister Stephen Harper and NDP Leader Jack Layton.

Ignatieff brushed off suggestions he's not connecting with voters. "I think we have got a week in which we choose a government ... who do you trust to govern the country?"

Unfortunately for Ignatieff, if you believe some recent polls, an increasing number of voters trust Layton.

Ignatieff and other leaders have set their sights on Layton, saying big-budget campaign promises are based on invented revenues.

The NDP leader started yesterday with a church service in Toronto. He later crossed paths with Ignatieff at a Khalsa Day parade, a huge affair that draws tens of thousands of Sikhs celebrating the birth of their religion.

Harper spent Easter Sunday in Victoria and Vancouver where the Tories are eager to hold on to the vulnerable ridings. Harper was asked if Canadians are prepared to trust him with the power that comes with a majority. "We always say in all these elections ... voters are never supposed to give absolute trust to anybody," he replied. THE CANADIAN PRESS

NDP, Libs neck and neck: Poll

The Liberal and NDP campaigns, which some polls suggest are in a tight race for second place in this election, came face to face yesterday.

Both Liberal Leader Michael Ignatieff and NDP Leader Jack Layton gave remarks at a Sikh celebration in Toronto.

There have been plenty of instances during this campaign in which various leaders have crossed paths as they jet from city to city, but there hasn't yet been an event two leaders attended at the same time.

The annual Khalsa Day parade in Toronto is a huge affair that draws tens of thousands of Sikhs celebrating the birth of their religion.

The campaign clash comes as Ignatieff — as well as the other party leaders — have set their sights on Layton in recent days.

has happened, but life goes on," he said.

Rae tweeted Saturday his front left tire was slashed.

"It sounds like it's fairly widespread," he said of the vandalism, adding that when his wife took the car to get a new tire, somebody else was already at the shop whose car had been damaged by a key.

At least two-dozen cases of vandalism have been reported in the past couple of days.

Rap scene booms in Benghazi

A growing group of amateur rappers are inspiring rebel fighters heading into battle against Moammar Gadhafi's forces.

The music captures the anger and frustration young Libyans feel at decades of repressive

One song is Youth of the Revolution, which rap group Music Masters wrote after the uprising began in mid-February.

The freewheeling rap scene developing in Benghazi shows how much has changed in eastern Libya in recent months. Rap, like other forms of Western culture, was despised by Gadhafi, who burned foreign musical instruments and books after he seized power in 1969.

'Cyber' insurers aim at ill-advised tweets

- ▶ You really shouldn't call your boss 'a fat cow' online
- ▶ But if you do, new policies could cover you

As more and more companies turn to Facebook, Twitter and other social-media sites to market products, communicate with customers and collect information, they leave themselves open to lawsuits over intellectual property infringement and defamation.

And where there's risk, there's the insurance sector. Brokers in Canada are starting to develop coverage for the consequences of unruly posts.

The liability risk stems from the fact that many companies don't have clear, written policies for social networking, says Eric Dolden, a Vancouver insurance lawyer.

"My boss is a big fat cow" is a very common

Social media insurance is "new in Canada. Brokers have caught on to what their colleagues are doing in the U.S. and have been very strong in promoting this class of business."

MALCOLM RANDES, POLICY WRITER FOR KILN, A SUBSIDIARY OF LLOYD'S OF LONDON

tweet," he says. "But people often stupidly then say where they work and who their boss is in the tweet."

The legal ramifications can hurt both the finances and reputation of a business. "We've seen people, in their personal capacities — the 'big-fat-cow boss' — bringing a lawsuit against the individual," Dolden says. "And we've also seen the company take action because their brand is now suddenly viral, negatively."

Dolden says demand for social-media insurance coverage — which can cost up to $100,000 for a $10-million policy that protects against data loss and liability — is mostly for corporations. But it's only a matter of time before firms offer personal insurance lines, much like automobile insurance for drivers.

"I think it's going to come for individuals. It's probably about five years out." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Bratz winz legal fight with Mattel

Mattel Inc. lost its claim to the billion-dollar Bratz doll line on Thursday when a U.S. federal jury awarded the copyright to upstart rival MGA Entertainment Inc., along with more than $88 million US in damages for misappropriation of trade secrets. The verdict was a staggering blow to the toy giant, which has long claimed the smaller company stole the idea for the ethnically diverse, pouty-lipped toys that gave Mattel's platinum-haired Barbie a run for her money after decades of fashion doll dominance. The verdict will allow MGA to regain control of its flagship doll and to once again try to compete with Barbie to dominate the market.

STEVE COLLINS
METRO OTTAWA

We don't hear much about housing and homelessness in this election campaign of targeted tax credits, income-splitting and other middle-class voter bait, so it's encouraging to see they haven't been completely forgotten at city hall. Council will discuss a plan this week for $14 million in new spending on social housing and fighting homelessness, money promised by the mayor in last fall's campaign and included in this year's budget.

This sum, added to the $300 million-plus we already throw at this intractable problem every year, isn't going to buy us a solution, but the new housing, repairs to existing units, rent supplements and other measures are all desperately needed.

"Ottawa scored its highest mark, a lacklustre C+, for creating 334 new social housing units in 2010, far short of the city's goal of 500, but a huge improvement on the previous year's 88."

Two weeks ago, the Alliance To End Homelessness issued its annual report card on the lot of Ottawa's poorest. As usual, there's a lot of bad and worsening news, but a few bright spots as well, of which the $14 million is the brightest.

Ottawa scored its highest mark, a lacklustre C+, for creating 334 new social housing units in 2010, far short of the city's goal of 500, but a huge improvement on the previous year's 88.

That sounds vaguely OK, until you look at the waiting list for these places — 10,502 last year. As they wait, they're at the mercy of the market, which isn't merciful.

When it comes to the affordability of a place to live, Ottawa gets an F from the alliance. If you make minimum wage, your rent will eat up 44 per cent of your income. On the Ontario Disability Support Program, it's 69 per cent.

Lower down, the numbers go from bad to ludicrous. A single person on Ontario Works received $592 a month last year, up $7 from 2009, no matter where in the province they live. But the average rent for a bachelor apartment here went up $22, to $715 from $688. That would put you $123 underwater before frills like food and clothing.

The report gives credit where it's due for the city's new cash injection, but rightly points out that we need all levels of government pulling in the same direction. The federal government, in post-stimulus hangover phase, has instead reduced funding to housing and homelessness programs for this year.

The alliance calls for $2 billion a year for new social housing nationwide. Our $14-million investment may just be a drop in that bucket, but that's what you fill buckets with.

#elxn41: Be Heard

Metro invited Federation of Canadian Municipalities CEO Brock Carlton and columnist Ivor Tossell to discuss urban issues and what's missing from the federal election campaign. The following are excerpts from the online chat.

METRO: Why should a federal campaign address urban issues?

BROCK: The federal government has a large role to play in our cities and communities. Their policies and programs have a direct impact on cities and towns. The feds cannot deliver to Canadians without working with cities. Our country is too big and complex to work in silos. And we need national leadership from the feds on key issues that affect our economy, the environment and social issues.

IVOR: Well, you could ask, what does the federal government have to do with health care, which is also a provincial matter? The fact is that cities are a central part of Canadian life, just like health care. A national vision for what it means to live in a Canadian city is important — it's quality of life.

Mystery person hops to it to help woman and pet

An anonymous donor has purchased a $50,000 insurance policy to help an Oklahoma woman keep her pet kangaroo as a therapy pet.

The Broken Arrow city council is considering an exotic animal ordinance exemption that would allow Christie Carr to keep Irwin, the partially paralyzed red kangaroo, within city limits.

Council could vote May 3 on a proposal that would allow exotic animal owners to keep their pets if they obtain a newly created permit. The permit would require them to have a liability insurance policy for any injuries inflicted by the animal, certification showing the animal has adequate housing for its health, and meet all U.S. federal and state guidelines for licensing, among other provisions.

Carr said she couldn't have afforded to purchase such a policy and even contemplated moving out of Broken Arrow to continue caring for the animal. Coun. Richard Carter said the ordinance exemption is designed to allow Christie to keep Irwin within city limits while safeguarding residents from potential harm the animal might cause. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Anne Hathaway and Jesse Eisenberg's talking birds have edged out Tyler Perry's sass-talking grandma at the weekend box office. The animated family adventure Rio took in $26.8 million to remain the No. 1 movie for the second-straight weekend.

Tyler Perry's Madagascar: A Family Adventure debuted a close second with $25.8 million, another solid opening for writer-director Perry, who also stars as boisterous grandma Madea.

Reese Witherspoon and Robert Pattinson's circus romance Water for Elephants premiered in third place with $17.5 million.

► Friday Night Lights star gets so into character for role as South African war photographer in The Bang Bang Club, he needed counseling to get back out

SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Taking on the role of photojournalist Kevin Carter in The Bang Bang Club was hardly a vacation for Taylor Kitsch.

"I didn't sleep. It was a zoo to shoot," he says of the film, which tells the true story of a group of photographers covering the violent last days of apartheid in South Africa. "It wasn't a fun shoot for me at all. I had a lot of kidney problems playing Kev, through the diet and losing 30-something pounds."

Known to audiences for his work on Friday Night Lights, and starring alongside Hugh Jackman in Wolverine, Kitsch threw himself into playing Carter, starting before heading to Johannesburg for filming.

"I had two months to prep on my own in Austin, so that entailed shadowing a photographer, getting a Leica, which is about a 60-year-old film camera that Kev used, developing myself with that, shooting about five to 10 rolls a day and then losing the 30-something pounds just running every day in Austin," he explains.

"There's so much pressure I personally put on myself to do this guy justice, so I prepped and prepped so much. It brings your game up more. I would've done anything to get where I needed to be, to feel I could let the scene go. I was a wreck. It's an incredible amount of energy."

But any amount of effort was more than worth it, Kitsch insists, given how badly he wanted to do the film. "Even reading the script and fighting for the role, it was a matter of, like, I know I can play this guy truthfully," he says. "There's something that I know I could hit with him."

But while he worked relentlessly on getting into character, Kitsch wasn't necessarily prepared for how difficult it would be to get out of character, given the intense scenes Carter lived through. (Carter won a Pulitzer Prize for a photo of a young Sudanese girl resting being stalked by a vulture.)

"Some counseling was needed, and just separating yourself and being incredibly conscious of it and being OK that it's taking time to let go was a big thing for me.

"Playing other characters, I can let go and I can laugh a lot. It's not as heavy, obviously. But you take it home with you."

Luckily he won't be taking as much home with him again soon, as his next projects are more on the fun side. Of course, even his upcoming BattleShip — based on the board game — isn't without its gravitas.

"Just because it's this big film doesn't mean we can't have a very, very intense moment here or there, or have loss," he says.

Speaking of aliens, Kitsch will be keeping with the action genre as the title character in John Carter of Mars.

"I was looking at a 100-foot green screen and there was an X on it at the 75-foot mark, and that was supposed to be a ship that I'm blowing up," he says. "In situations like that, escapism is a lot harder as an actor, and tests you in different ways."

"With Bang Bang, I had a f---ing child and a vulture. If you can't put yourself in a present moment there, then you've got to go back to New York and study a bit more."

Potter star Watson to transfer from Brown

A spokeswoman for Harry Potter star Emma Watson says she will be transferring from Brown University to another university in the autumn.

Vanessa Davies denied reports that the 21-year-old actress was "bullied out" of the Rhode Island university, saying there was no truth in reports by a number of online publications who cited classmates and "insiders."

Davies said Saturday that Watson, who plays Hermione in the wizard movie series, has decided to pursue a different course not offered at Brown.

She added that the star "has absolutely loved her time at Brown" and made many good friends there.

Watson has recently taken time out of her studies to focus on her movie career. She has said that her first days in college were difficult.

Davies did not identify the university Watson will be transferring to.

Lindsay facing serious jail time

► Lohan given 120-day sentence ► Could still be cleared

Though her felony charge was reduced to a misdemeanor, Lindsay Lohan was sentenced to 120 days in jail plus 480 hours of community service for violating her probation by allegedly stealing a $2,500 necklace from a jewelry store, according to TMZ.

But Lohan isn't sunk yet, as the judge is giving the actress the chance to prove her innocence at a trial set to begin May 11.

Lohan posted $75,000 bail and was released five hours later. Her lawyer is appealing the decision.

Yikes! Her first dance!

► This week, the Disney movie Prom premieres, reminding us how fun and scary a school dance can be ► Dr. Susan Newman, Ph.D., social psychologist and author of The Book of NO: 250 Ways to Say It – and Mean It and Stop People-Pleasing Forever, addresses parents' worries

SAM D'AMATO
LIFE@METRONews.ca

METRO WORLD NEWS

WORRY ONE: Dances are basically foreplay for teen sex. I've discussed responsibility with my kid, but I am worried the advice will be forgotten after a night of dancing and too many episodes of Gossip Girl.

SAYS THE DOCTOR: The values and advice you have shared with your teenager hopefully have "sunk in" by the time prom rolls around. It is up to your child to be smart when it comes to sex. Worry about things you can orchestrate. Send your child off to have fun, but with a quiet reminder to be careful.

WORRY TWO: Someone else's kids are going to get drunk and drive. How do I warn my kid without sounding like a public service announcement? SAYS THE DOCTOR: You absolutely want to sound like a public service announcement! Leading up to the dance, remind your child of teen drunk driving tragedies. You can soften your parental stand by reminding your child that he or she is the most important thing in your life.

WORRY THREE: My child is an introvert and will probably spend the entire evening against the wall. It breaks my heart. What should I do?

SAYS THE DOCTOR: You might suggest that your child arrange to attend the dance with a group of friends or one friend. Beyond that, there's not a lot a parent can do ... and trying to hard makes the situation worse. If you try to discuss it, your child will tell you don't understand — and you probably don't. It hurts parents to see a child suffer, but as parents we have to accept the fact that we can't protect our children from every insult.

WORRY FOUR: There's an after-prom party at some other kid's house. The parents are out of town. There will be no chaperones. When do I storm in and act like a police officer?

SAYS THE DOCTOR: You don't. Why can't parents say NO anymore? The teen brain is not fully mature, particularly the part that thinks ahead, weighs consequences, and manages emotional impulses. Parties without chaperones tend to get out of hand easily: uninvited guests appear, alcohol and drugs get consumed, noise levels rise and judgment fails. Neighbours call the police and your child winds up in a situation he or she never intended. Boundaries, parents, that's your job. Say no or offer to hold the party at your home.

► What to wear will not be the only decision your child will have to make.

Something old...

► Will Kate Middleton wear a family heirloom?

It's guaranteed that Kate Middleton will wear a tiara on her wedding day. What we don't know is if it will be old, new or borrowed from the royal vault.

Gifting a royal bride with a tiara as a wedding present is a long-standing royal tradition. For her wedding, the Queen presented Diana with The Cambridge Lovers Knot tiara, which was made in 1911 for Queen Mary. Sarah Ferguson was given a tiara the royals purchased from Garrard. Sophie, Countess of Wessex, was given a custom-made tiara. It featured jewels from a necklace belonging to Queen Victoria.

A new spin on the classic chicken and waffles

► What do pancake mix, barbecue sauce, plain yogurt, nacho chips and chicken have in common? ► They're all used to create this unique dish

DINNER EXPRESS

EMILY RICHARDS
FOOD@METRONEWS.CA

I never back down from a challenge, so when Canadian Family magazine asked me to participate in the launch of its Food Awards, I was game.

The awards honour the top brands used in Canadian households, and will be announced in a special Winter Food Issue. In the meantime, readers can vote and participate in the Canadian Family Creative Cook Challenge (canadianfamily.ca/creative-cook-challenge), during which they must use ingredients provided by Canadian Family to create a dessert.

My challenge involved pancake mix, plain yogurt, barbecue sauce and more. I came up with Crunchy Chicken Salad Waffle Wraps. I used the pancake mix and yogurt help to create a light fluffy waffle that stays soft and can be used to wrap the chicken, or simply serve it on top.

Preparation:

1 Place pancake mix in bowl; set aside. In another bowl, whisk eggs, yogurt, milk and butter. Whisk into pancake mix until smooth.

2 Heat waffle iron. For each waffle brush lightly with oil; pour in scant ½ cup (125 mL) of the batter. Close lid and cook for about 4 minutes or until steam stops and waffle is golden. Remove gently and repeat with remaining batter; set waffles aside.

Ingredients:

- 1 cup (250 mL) Aunt Jemima Original pancake mix
- 2 eggs
- 1 cup (250 mL) Activia plain yogurt
- 1/3 cup (75 mL) milk
- 2 tbsp (25 mL) butter

3 Crunchy Chicken: In shallow baking dish, whisk barbecue sauce, mustard and thyme. Add chicken and turn to coat evenly; set aside for 10 minutes or cover and refrigerate 8 hours.

4 Meanwhile, combine nachos and mum mums in resealable bag and crush into fine crumbs. Add parsley. Place a few chicken strips in bag and shake to coat. Place

Crunchy Chicken:

- 1/3 cup (75 mL) Diana gourmet barbecue sauce
- 2 tsp (10 mL) Dijon or yellow mustard
- 1/2 tsp (2 mL) thyme
- 1 pkg (425 g) Maple Leaf Prime boneless skinless chicken breasts, cut into strips coated chicken on parchment paper lined baking sheet and repeat with remaining chicken. Bake in 425 F (220 C) oven for 15 minutes or until no longer pink inside. Top waffles with lettuce and chicken.

Fiesta Pork and Vegetables

Here is a perfect way to include local pork on your menu. It's easy enough for a weeknight meal with tons of flavour.

Preparation:

1 Slice pork in half lengthwise; cut crosswise into 1/4-inch (5 mm) thick slices. In large pot, heat 1 tbsp (15 mL) of the oil over medium-high heat; cook pork for 2 or 3 minutes or until just a hint of pink remains. Transfer to a plate.

2 Add remaining oil to pot; reduce heat to medium. Cook carrots, garlic and onion, stirring occasionally, for 4 minutes or until onion softens. Stir in mushrooms, chili powder, cumin and salt; cook until mushrooms start to soften.

3 Whisk flour into chicken broth; gradually stir into pot, scraping up any bits stuck to bottom. Stir in red pepper, salsa and corn; bring just to a boil over high heat, stirring often. Reduce heat and simmer for 5 to 8 minutes, stirring occasionally, or until slightly thickened and vegetables are just tender.

4 Return pork and accumulated juices to pot; cook for 2 minutes. Stir in half of the cilantro. Serve sprinkled with remaining cilantro.

FOODLAND ONTARIO

Ingredients:

- 1 pork tenderloin (about 12 oz/375 g), trimmed
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) vegetable oil
- 3 carrots, halved lengthwise and thinly sliced crosswise
- 3 cloves garlic, minced
- 1 onion, chopped
- 3 cups (750 mL) white mushrooms
- 1 tbsp (15 mL) chili powder
- 1 tsp (5 mL) each ground cumin and salt
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) all-purpose flour
- 1 1/2 cups (375 mL) sodium-reduced chicken broth
- 1 red bell pepper, seeded and chopped
- 1 cup (250 mL) extra-chunky salsa
- 1/2 cup (125 mL) frozen corn kernels

Canadian companies emerging as leaders in the clean-tech industry

BEN KNIGHT
GREEN@METRONEWS.CA

With each Earth Day that passes, our world becomes more ecologically aware. New, emerging technologies are greener, and vast profits are out there for innovators with the right product, in the right place, at the right time.

Canadian companies are beginning to do very well in the clean-tech field — but not without some considerable risk.

“You have to approach the market in a very strategic manner,” says Gael Maurant, president and CEO of ARXX, a leading supplier of Insulating Concrete Forms (ICFs) for energy-efficient construction. “The construction industry is very averse to change. You have to make people comfortable with the idea they can do things differently, but at the same time, actually get a better product at a more cost-effective price.”

ARXX is based in

Cobourg, Ont. Maurant says proximity to the United States is a significant advantage for Canadian clean-tech firms.

open to new ideas. The idea of green buildings and energy savings is very rooted in Canada.”

Scott MacDonald is a partner at Emerald Technology Ventures, an investment firm specializing in clean-tech start-ups. He sees deteriorating global infrastructure as a huge opportunity for Canadian firms.

“There are 70 to 100-year-old assets — around the world — where they don’t have technology and innovation right now,” he says. “We’re trying to make the grid smarter. We’re trying to identify where leaks in water systems are. That’s not an emerging market. That’s a market that exists, that isn’t presently efficient. We’re taking real business problems that exist today, and finding

Dealing with restaurant waste

Much has been made of the farm-to-table restaurant movement. But what happens to all the food that ends up uneaten at the table?

In what you might call a burgeoning table-to-farm movement, a small but growing number of companies are being launched around the U.S. to answer that question, to help restaurants deal with the ecologically and economically expensive problem of food waste by composting it.

“The restaurant business is an incredibly wasteful business,” says Peter

ALEX BRANDON/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

► Jeremy Brosowsky runs a business to help restaurants do away properly with their waste.

Egelston, owner of Portsmouth Brewery restaurant in Portsmouth, N.H.

And so two years ago

Egelston’s brewery began composting with the help of EcoMovement, a company that hauls food waste from about 40 restaurants in the region and takes it to be composted.

Composting — a natural process in which food and other organic scraps are decomposed into fertile soil — has long been a mainstay of farms and backyards. But few restaurants have the space or time to compost their own waste. And so they typically pay to have it disposed of in landfills along with the rest of their trash.

But as communities have struggled to reduce their waste, pressure has mounted on the restaurant industry to do its part.

CHOICES FOR GREEN MOMS

Are cloth diapers the most eco-friendly choice, or are there disposable options that make the cut? Andrea of London, Ont.

QUEEN OF GREEN

LINDSAY COULTER
GREEN@METRONEWS.CA

Disposable diapers are landfill magnets — in some cities diapers and other disposables (razors, plastic wrap, paper coffee cups) are estimated to make up about eight per cent of total household waste. Disposable diapers are also made from plastic, with chlorine-bleached stuffing and added fragrance chemicals. The good news is that cloth diapers aren’t what they were 30 years ago.

Today they’re stylish, eco-friendly (some are even manufactured with wind power), 100 per cent organic cotton, and you can find brands made in Canada — definitely a worthy choice. There’s no need to buy new cloth diapers either. Source them from thrift or secondhand stores — they’re washable, after all. Surf online for “green” mommy websites too. They host a plethora of tips, advice and product reviews by real moms. Word on the street is a diaper service makes a perfect baby shower gift and can be cost-competitive option to disposables.

Another option, teetering between disposable and reusable, is the gDiaper. Like a cloth diaper, it has a reusable gPant that you line with a biodegradable or compostable gRefill — you can only compost the wet ones not the poop ones. These refills are free of elemental chlorine and perfumes. The company also makes a reusable cloth insert. The gRefill is actually one of the first consumer packaged goods with “Cradle to Cradle” certification. That means everything that goes into making the biodegradable and flushable gRefill breaks down in 50 to 150 days.

Unconventional and a risk taker. That describes Ottawa interior designer Jason Bellaire, who says that you have to get past your fear and believe in yourself if you're going to be successful in business.

After struggling with his career in his 20s, Bellaire decided to go back to school at the age of 30 to study interior design and architecture.

Jason raised a few eyebrows in the industry when he started his own company six months after graduation.

"It was hammered into our heads at school that you had to apprentice for five or six years before going out on your own. I had to overcome my fear and now looking back over the last two years I can't believe how far I've come."

Jason and his partner, Denise Hulaj, are the hot new design team taking our nation's capital by storm with 10 projects on the go.

He has this advice for

Jason's tips

Tools to a successful business design

There is life after a lay-off

► Don't fall into failure-mode after being fired ► The future is bright!

A job loss effects more than just one person.

Lisa Caldas Kappesser, author of The Smart New Way to Get Hired, shares her advice on how to get everyone through it.

Communication

Discuss with your family what your job search strategy is and what steps you have taken or plan to take in the near future.

Communication is critical in families, particularly in times of stress and crisis when many people tend to withdraw.

Empathy

Everyone needs support and understanding. If you have children, listen to their concerns and keep in mind that most children are egocentric.

Optimism

Be a role model for your family in how to deal with crisis and change. Your children will be in a job search someday and will remember how you handled it.

They learn from your behavior, so it's best to model positive behavior.

Self-confidence

If you have confidence in yourself, your family and significant other will have more confidence that you can and will find another job.

You need to think and act in terms of when you find your next job and not if you will find another job.

Conflict management

Accept that there will be disagreements and work to resolve them. It takes less energy to deal with a conflict when it first arises than it does after months of letting it build up.

Dealing with disagreements openly can help everyone move in a positive direction. Know that you might not agree at the end of your discussion. In fact, you may have to come to an agreement to disagree with each other at some point.

Adaptability

During times of stress, it is normal to resort back to old, established and comfortable ways of doing things, but stressful times are often when new ideas and strategies need to be tried. Encourage each other to be flexible.

A small-city student with big-city ideas

TALENTEGG.CA

For me, a student from a small Nova Scotia university, the hardest part of finding a summer job is getting top employers based in large cities to take a second look at my application.

During a recent family vacation, I met a group of five students from the University of Guelph.

When they asked where I attended school, I replied, "Acadia University." To my surprise, not a single one of them had heard of the school.

After that encounter, I couldn't help but wonder if employers were thinking the exact same thing: Uh, Acadia? Who?

If this is true, at least in some organizations, how is this affecting my application during the selection process?

From an employer's perspective, it is certainly justifiable to hire the candidate from the school known for its strong academic standing or the school that you can identify with ("Our organization is based in Toronto so it makes sense to hire from the University of Toronto"). After all, the aim is to hire the brightest and most qualified.

However, from the Nova Scotia student perspective, this makes standing out in a sea of applications that much more difficult.

When I'm applying for a job in Toronto from my residence room at Acadia in Wolfville, N.S., population

3,800 (7,000 during the school year), I can't help but feel like there's a giant wall between myself and the employer.

And, if they're thinking the same thing — who is Kate MacKenzie, what is Acadia, and where the heck is Wolfville — then it seems likely that my application may come second to, "Ah yes, Jane Doe from Queen's. I went to Queen's too!"

I know that this isn't always the case and that many organizations make a sincere effort to fairly evaluate all candidates. However, I think that some companies could improve their recruitment processes by recognizing the gap between small-town students and big-city jobs and adjusting their application accordingly.

Small changes, such as assigning recruiters to regions across Canada and using technology such as Skype to do interviews, can make a huge difference. These adjustments make the recruitment process less location-specific and less intimidating. They also allow the employer to really get to know the candidates face-to-face to ensure that they're hiring the best of the best.

Also, by including students from many different schools and locations, organizations will only benefit from the increased diversity and perspective.

Where Kate is now

Ironically enough, I proposed this exact idea to an organization based in Toronto and explained the unique perspective that I could bring to the company as a result of my East Coast experiences. Now, I couldn't be more excited to be working for that company this summer!

Key take-aways from Kate's school-to-work transition

- If you attend school in a different city than where the organization you want to work for is located, briefly explain the discrepancy in the email or cover letter and outline your plans for relocation.

- Don't be afraid to ask for an interview over the phone or through a video chat program like Skype — in-person interviews aren't the only option.

- Worried your school isn't as recognized as some of the more high profile institutions? Focus primarily on your accomplishments in your resumé and cover letter, but be prepared to discuss the quality of your education in the interview.

Predators knock out the Ducks

Nick Spaling scored his second goal of the game at 4:53 of the third period and the Nashville Predators closed out their first post-season series victory to advance to the Western Conference semifinals, beating the Anaheim Ducks 4-2 yesterday.

Steve Sullivan scored a goal, David Legwand had an empty-netter and Jordin Tootoo assisted on Spaling's goals. The Predators won the series 4-2 in their sixth post-season in seven seasons.

Jason Blake scored a power-play goal, and Teemu Selanne also had a goal for the Ducks. Anaheim looked tired early after blowing a lead late before losing Game 5 in overtime. They looked tired late as coach Randy Carlyle went heavily with his top two lines, trying to rally.

Anaheim lost in the opening round for the third time in seven playoffs.

The fifth-seeded Predators must wait to see who they play next.

Leino's goal keeps Philly in playoffs

► Flyers were on ropes after falling behind 3-1 in first period, but they battled back to win in overtime

Ville Leino scored 4:43 into overtime and Brian Boucher's return in another relief appearance sparked the Philadelphia Flyers to force Game 7 in their first-round playoff series against the Buffalo Sabres.

Danny Briere scored twice and Boucher stopped 24 shots over the final two periods and overtime in a 5-4 victory yesterday, in what's been a tightly contested and topsy-turvy series that heads to the deciding game in Philadelphia tomorrow.

Boucher took over to start the second period after Michael Leighton allowed three goals on the first seven shots.

FLYERS	SABRES

Scott Hartnell had a goal and assist and James van Riemsdyk also scored for the Flyers, who overcame a two-goal deficit.

Thomas Vanek had two goals for Buffalo, while Rob Niedermayer and Nathan Gerbe also scored.

Rebounding from a pair of losses, the Flyers became the first team in the series to win after giving up the opening goal.

Heat can't sweep 76ers

The Philadelphia 76ers told each other in the huddle in the final possessions they were going back to Miami.

Lou Williams proved them right, hitting a three-pointer with 8.1 seconds left to lead the 76ers to an 86-82 win over the Heat yesterday and avoid a sweep.

Miami was 95 seconds away from winning Game

15 Game 4 followed the familiar pattern of Games 1 and 3, as the 76ers earned an early 15-point lead.

4, holding an 82-76 lead, but LeBron James, Dwyane Wade, Chris Bosh and the rest of the Heat didn't score again.

Williams and Evan Turner led the Sixers with 17 points each. Andre Iguodala added 16 points, and Elton Brand had 15 points and 11 rebounds.

James scored 31 points for the Heat and Wade 22. Bosh scored 12 points and had two clutch blocks late in the game.

Today's horoscope

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 You will have to make some kind of sacrifice today, and you should do so willingly.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 Make the most of your opportunities.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 Find a way to switch off the chaos and confusion of the outside world.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 You CAN change things for the better, but you've got to work with like-minded souls.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23 The more negative others get the more determined you'll be to prove them wrong.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24-Sept. 22 Don't sit back and wait for others to take the lead — take it yourself and set the agenda.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 Listen to your instincts and act on what they tell you.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 Make a special effort to get along with the people you live, work and do business with.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 If you neglect something small today something big could fall apart.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Push doubts aside and take the kind of risks you usually try to avoid.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Certain people are going to make life difficult for you today.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20. Start conversations with total strangers. ● SALLY BROMPTON
